

ECPA WEBINAR:

Community Psychology and Covid-19: Towards an Environmental Justice?

Donata Francescato (via live stream)
11th June, 2020.
5 PM (UTC +2)

Covid 19, health and climate change are not distant cousins!

Let's not get back to normal after coronavirus! The old normal has polluted our Earth, created vulnerabilities and oppressions, and now is the time to create new futures.

Community psychology and environmental justice

For many decades, community psychology has been fighting oppression, violence, poverty, inequalities, and discrimination while environmental problems have been neglected in our research and practice.

- Will the coronavirus make community psychologists more interested in climate justice?
- Should fighting environmental injustice be the top priority for community psychologists?
- What attitudes do you think most community psychologists have toward climate change?
- What can community psychologists do as professionals and activists to increase environmental justice?
- Should community psychologists promote a planetary sense of community?

Rethinking our approach

The burden of climate change is extremely high, and it is already negatively impacting the health and well-being of our communities.

- What are the most urgent environmental problems?
- Do you want to save the planet you live in?
- Is there a “real world” or is everything socially constructed?
- Can we reach sustainable development by 2030?
- Would you invest in a green bond?

The event is free of charge.
Please ensure registration here.

See also:

<http://www.ecpa-online.com/webinar-environmental-justice/>

